Be Faithful

"For everyone who has will be given more, and he will have an abundance.

Whoever does not have, even what he has will be taken from him." (Matthew 25:29)

Faithful. Jesus implores us to be faithful with what we have been given. To illustrate this point he tells us about the three servants who have been entrusted with their master's money. The first two invested wisely, and received this commendation: "His master replied, 'Well done, good and faithful servant! You have been faithful with a few things; I will put you in charge of many things.'" However, it was the third servant who found himself on the receiving end of his master's wrath. "Master," he said, "I knew that you are a hard man, harvesting where you have not sown and gathering where you have not scattered seed. So I was afraid and went out and hid your talent in the ground. See, here is what belongs to you." And in response to that the master said: "You wicked, lazy servant!"

Two men who put their money to work each received the same commendation. It was not the portion but the proportion that made the difference. They started as servants, but their master promoted them to rulers. They were faithful with a few things, so the master trusted them with many things. Their faithfulness gave each of them a capacity for greater service and responsibility. It is possible that the third servant thought his portion or talent was too small and insignificant to make an impact. So he did nothing with it. But he was appointed steward of that one talent by the Lord! His one talent could have increased to two and brought glory to his master.

We, too, have been appointed stewards of all that Lord has given us. Regardless of your portion, it is significant in the life of the Church, and the Lord will bless it.

A young British boy was spending the summer with his family in Scotland. One hot day, while wandering through the woods by himself, he came upon a swimming hole, and jumped in. The water was extremely cold, and he soon found himself doubled up with severe cramps, unable to swim to shore. He struggled and flailed in the water, and was about to go under when suddenly he felt a pair of strong arms reach around him, bringing him to safety. It was a Scottish farm boy who had been working in a nearby field when he heard the cries for help. The next day, the father of the English boy sought out the Scottish farm hand. He thanked him profusely for saving his son, then asked him what he planned to do with his life. "I suppose I'll be a farmer like my father," the boy answered. "Is there anything else you'd rather do?" the Englishman asked. "Well, I've always wanted to be a doctor. But we are poor people. My parents could never afford the schooling." "Never mind that," said the Englishman. "You shall have your dream." And that day the man pledged to pay the Scottish boy's way through medical school. Years later, in 1943, Prime Minister Winston Churchill was in North Africa, dangerously ill with pneumonia. The brilliant scientist, Sir Alexander Fleming, was summoned to fly down, and to bring with him a sample of his new wonder drug, penicillin. Fleming administered the new drug to Churchill, who made a remarkable recovery. As he injected the drug, Fleming saved Churchill's life for the second time: it was Alexander Fleming who had pulled the young Winston Churchill from a Scottish swimming hole so many years before. As a young boy, Fleming gave all that he had, risking his life to save a fellow human being in distress. Churchill's father, in gratitude, gave Fleming the priceless gift of an education. Neither one could have imagined the long-term impact their gifts would have. Each one gave what he had -- and it was enough.

"For everyone who has will be given more, and he will have an abundance."

Vicar's Voice

Christ is risen! Alleluia!

As it seems I have used the last few Vicar's Voices to talk about good and interesting pieces of theological writing, I am going to continue that trend this month. Our Maundy Thursday Seder supper got me thinking about discussions of how Christ's Passion parallels the Passover, and I remembered an ancient treatise on the subject that we read in one of my Hebrew classes at Concordia Seminary, Melito of Sardis' Peri tou Pascha, or On the Passover.

Not a lot is known about Melito; he died in the year 180 and was bishop of Sardis (now Sart) in western Turkey. He was born into a Jewish family, and so his expression and understanding of the Christian faith has a profoundly Jewish flavor to it, and many of his writings concern the fulfillment of the Old Testament (a term he coined, no less) in Christ. He may also have been a eunuch. He was held in great esteem by many in the second-century Church, and he was a prolific writer, even writing a defense of Christian teaching that was presented to the emperor Marcus Aurelius. Sadly, not many of his writings survive, though many are mentioned in the works of ancient church historians.

On the Passover is an interesting and worthwhile read because Melito, in a sense, creates a Christian haggadah, re-counting the events of the Passion and the work of Christ, while also explaining how the Exodus was a model for Christ's redemption of the world and the relationship between the Old and the New Testaments. Melito explains how much of what we see in the Old Testament serves as a typology for what Christ ultimately does, and he neatly ties together the whole of Scripture. The treatise also contains something of an indictment of Israel for rejecting her Lord (cf. John 1:10-11). Those who had assembled in Jerusalem to celebrate the Passover did not recognize their Lord and handed over their maker to the authorities who crucified the true Passover Lamb. But Melito ends the treatise with the promise of Christ's forgiveness found in the resurrection. Forgiveness is for "all families of men, you who have been befouled with sins" — Jesus will "raise [them] up by [his] right hand" (On the Passover, 103).

I have reproduced below the section of the treatise in which Melito illustrates how Christ is the true Passover lamb whose death redeems all people.

May you live in the joy of Easter this month,

Vicar Nils Niemeier

From Melito of Sardis, On the Passover, trans. Gerald F. Hawthorn. Printed in Kerux: A Journal of Biblical-Theological Preaching 4:1 (May 1989), pp. 22-23:

66. When this one came from heaven to earth for the sake of the one who suffers, and had clothed himself with that very one through the womb of a virgin, and having come forth as man, he accepted the sufferings of the sufferer through his body which was capable of suffering. And he destroyed those human sufferings by his spirit which was incapable of dying. He killed death which had put man to death.

67. For this one, who was led away as a lamb, and who was sacrificed as a sheep, by himself delivered us from servitude to the world as from the land of Egypt, and released us from bondage to the devil as from the hand of Pharaoh, and sealed our souls by his own spirit and the members of our bodies by his own blood.

68. This is the one who covered death with shame and who plunged the devil into mourning as Moses did Pharaoh. This is the one who smote lawlessness and deprived injustice of its offspring, as Moses deprived Egypt. This is the one who delivered us from slavery into freedom, from darkness into light, from death into life, from tyranny into an eternal kingdom, and who made us a new priesthood, and a special people forever.

69. This one is the passover of our salvation. This is the one who patiently endured many things in many people: This is the one who was murdered in Abel, and bound as a sacrifice in Isaac, and exiled in Jacob, and sold in Joseph, and exposed in Moses, and sacrificed in the lamb, and hunted down in David, and dishonored in the prophets.

70. This is the one who became human in a virgin, who was hanged on the tree, who was buried in the earth, who was resurrected from among the dead, and who raised mankind up out of the grave below to the heights of heaven.

71. This is the lamb that was slain. This is the lamb that was silent. This is the one who was born of Mary, that beautiful ewe-lamb. This is the one who was taken from the flock, and was dragged to sacrifice, and was killed in the evening, and was buried at night; the one who was not broken while on the tree, who did not see dissolution while in the earth, who rose up from the dead, and who raised up mankind from the grave below.

WORSHIP AND MUSIC MINISTRY

What Do You Expect?"

As a parent of two grown children who now have children of their own, I can still remember and think back to when my children were very young. A lot of different events and happenings cross my mind when I do that. One occurrence that stands out involved my daughter who was about three years old at the time. I don't recall exactly what she had done, but I do remember when I asked her about it. Her response was unforgettable. With her little hand on her hip and a very serious look on her face, she replied to my question, "What do you 'epec?'" That's three-year old language for "expect."

Perhaps this is an answer that many of us have heard when we've asked a question about one's actions or words. "What do you expect?" Perhaps it's an answer that we could ask ourselves when we think about what happens in worship and what do we hope to receive from worship.

The answer to that question is most likely different from one person to another. One thing, though, is certain. When we come to worship there is the potential for us to leave differently than when we came. When we come to worship with a spirit of expectancy that God is going to do wonderful things for us, He will! Where God is present and we come in faith, things happen! Lives are changed! Sin is forgiven! Faith is strengthened! People are healed! Broken relationships are restored!

A number of years ago, the American hymnwriter, Bryan Jeffrey Leech, wrote a text titled, "We Shall Be Changed." It was based upon I Corinthians 15: 51-52. While it spoke to the subject of the resurrection and the second coming, it also speaks to us as we enter into worship. "We Shall Be Changed." We ARE changed when we meet the resurrected Jesus. He is in the "Change Business."

What do we expect when we come to worship? Be ready to be changed and transformed. Come to worship expecting God's touch on your life. After all, Christ IS risen! He is risen, indeed! Alleluia!

God bless you in this Easter Season.

Interim Minister of Worship/Organist

Mark your calendars, invite your friends, neighbors, and co-workers, and start that 5-star chili recipe simmerin' - Monica's back again this year for a return engagement!

In Cape Cod, someone who lives but was not born there is a "Washashore." Young Monica barrel-raced on a Texas ranch but had never seen an ocean. So when she moved to Cape Cod in 2004, she instantly became the "Washashore Cowgirl" - also the title of her first album, nominated for best new country artist of the year.

Monica has shared the stage with Chris Botti, Boz Scaggs, Diana Krall, Joan Osborne, and Slaid Cleaves this past year, has played the Main Stage at Strawberry Park Bluegrass festival the last two years, and performed with Tom Rush's band at his annual Boston Symphony Hall show. Last year locally, she played both Ram's Head and Birchmere.

Living Savior is indeed fortunate to host Monica for an encore free concert open to the public.

(She also volunteered to be a judge for our chili cook-off!)
